

Nature and the Bourgeois Poet

On emerald pasture set in fiery seas
Of harvest ruminated sated cows.

Then rain blurred summer in a veil of scent.

The cows remained at ease;
but I, Nature's haberdasher, jeweler, parfumier, went back unrapt and wet to the house.

—Arthur Henry King
August 1943