

Thinking of the End in Fire

If leaving branches wither in some confusion of hard weather

If the last quick sparrow should fall, his fine brown inlay, his inquiring call

If the last child should stare gasping into burned and blinding air

If the least grass should go

—Bruce W. Jorgensen